

Hi,

I posted earlier to introduce myself, but I had not yet found a greenhouse to scout. I called many, and some were happy to have me work on this project there, but they were not yet growing anything, and wouldn't be until our class is almost over. One owner declined. A few did not call me back. Since I still did not have a location, I attended a greenhouse growers workshop day (which gives them pesticide recertification credits), and I made an announcement to ask if anyone would allow me to scout at their location. Two growers were very helpful, and are allowing me to use their place for any projects we do in the future.

I also drove to another greenhouse where I used to work, and the manager is double-checking with the owner for permission. So... I am technically waiting for final permission, but I took pictures and drew this map as a starter. There are more tables than this, but they are all kind of linked together to create the outside edge, and I have indicated the rough locations and general outline.

I have talked with the greenhouse and store managers, and was introduced to some of the other employees. They showed me some mealy bug that they found on a shipment of succulents that they had just received. They are getting return credit for the infested plants. The greenhouse is for houseplants only, and includes palms, succulents, and other tropicals. It is linked to a second retail greenhouse space much the same as the one I drew.

I do not want to release the name of the company until I have final permission from the owner.
Amy Howansky